It's one thing to decide that you've had enough of working for someone else and want to break free on your own, and an entirely different matter when thinking about what kind of business you want to have. Some people are born to be entrepreneurs from the get-go, while others make the decision to build their own business later in life. For those who are making a transition from a career to becoming a business owner, the choices of what to do can be overwhelming. Unless you have a clear idea of what you want to do, then there are some things that can help you narrow your choices and get inspired.

The whole idea behind starting your own business is to be happy and financially secure, so you should think about things that you want to do that will give you both attributes. If you are trying to escape the daily and mundane grind of your current career, or you were laid off and don't want to return to the same thing, then use this as an opportunity to build something that you will find rewarding and enjoyable. Attitude is everything when starting a small business, so you can do anything you want to do if you have the right mind-set. Don't be afraid to think big and to pursue your dreams.

You should think about money, time, resources, your abilities and whether or not you will be working online or in the real world. All of these things will play a role with your decision making process, and it is important that you choose a business that meets all of your requirements in these categories. Not every business requires a lot of start-up cash, and you can simply do a little bit of Internet marketing and word of mouth advertising to get your business off the ground. Whether you want to be a dog-groomer or an accountant that does house calls, you can make money quickly without needing to take out loans.

Some businesses are easy to set up and others require a lot of organization and planning. A cafe or restaurant will be more difficult to get started than an online or home-based business. A doctor's office will have different requirements than opening a bookstore. So, decide if you want simple or complex, and this will help you to eliminate the options that you do not want to deal with. You also need to think about what your talents are and how you will use them. Your skills can be applied in many different ways, so you are not necessarily stuck with doing what you were doing in the past.

No one can make up your mind for you in terms of what you can do for your business, and narrowing your focus can be helpful, especially if you have no clue what you want to do. Look at some different options and weigh the advantages as well as the drawbacks and this will help you to hone in on some good ideas.
